

Organ donations increase
Resident's plea brings donations

By JOHN CATRON
Assistant City Editor

Nationalwide plea from President Reagan to find a liver for an 11-month-old and recent donations in Utah Valley created a "huge public awareness" in about transplants, said Cheryl Walker, a University of Utah transplant coordinator.

Two families in Utah have donated the liver of their brain-dead child to help other children in need of organs. The Bollen family of Alpine donated in November the liver of their brain-dead child so the Fiske could live.

On Thursday, John and Cheryl Valerstein of American Fork donated the liver of their daughter Spring Ann to 8-year-old Louis Ragsdale of Memphis, Tenn. Spring Ann died of aplastic anemia, which is off the air passages in the throat. Ann's kidneys were also donated to University of Utah, said Arden Heer, grandfather of the girl.

Spring Ann's parents were asked by the staff of the Primary Children's Hospital if they would consider donating their child's organs, Spencer said. They didn't have any qualms about it. They could keep another family from going through the suffering that they felt in Spring Ann died, they were glad to do it, Spencer said.

Louis Ragsdale, who received Spring Ann's liver, is one of six children around the country who have had liver transplants since President Reagan made the request for liver donors.

More than 8,000 people around the country are on waiting lists for kidneys, and several hundred are waiting for livers, said Janet MacCallman, service director of the Intermountain Transplant Center.

Fewer donors

About 20 of these patients are Utahns, MacCallman said. There are fewer organ donors in Utah because the population is lower than in other areas. Utah has only one hospital that performs transplants; New York City has three.

Utah just does not have the donors, she said. People tend to get caught up in the grief of death and don't think about the needs of others. "It is a lack of awareness more than anything,"

MacCallman said people should talk to their families about donating organs beforehand so if the occasion ever arises, the family will know what to do.

Donor forms

The Utah State Legislature has already passed a bill to allow motorists to indicate on their driver's license application whether they would donate their organs if they were ever involved in an accident. The new forms will be available within a year.

Donors can choose the organs they would like to give and specify if they would not like their bodies to be used for anatomical research or as cadavers.

Since few Utahns have donor cards, the majority of donated organs come when doctors approach families of brain-dead patients to ask them if they would consider donating organs. More than 80 percent of families approached in Utah agree to donate, Walker said.

Part of the problem is a reluctance on the part of medical personnel to approach individuals that could donate because of the painful circumstances, she said.

Some Utahns have expressed concern about the official position of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints concerning organ donations. Jerry Cahill, director of public affairs for the church, denied rumors that the church is against transplants.

According to a letter written by the secretary to the first presidency in 1970, "Members are encouraged to review the advantages and disadvantages of doing so (donating) and to implore the Lord for guidance and inspiration, and then take the course of action that would give them the feeling of peace and comfort within their own conscious."

Cahill said the statement means, "Do what you want to do."

BBB bids farewell to county

By SHELLEY SHEPHERD
Senior Reporter

The Better Business Bureau of Utah has failed to raise an additional $100 to keep its doors open, said Betty Mumm, former director of the Utah BBB.

The BBB closed its doors to consumer complaints last week, but BBB officials members still hoped the additional $100 could be raised by the deadline. Engemann said, adding that the BBB only $15,000 away from its goal when all Lake chapter of the BBB decided use the bureau's funds.

No support

Engemann said the Provo community did not support the BBB chapter in County. She said the support needed from local businesses has not been come, and the closing of the BBB has resulted.

William Beadle, president of the Salt Lake City BBB, said Provo businesses were not to blame. The three-year-old bureau, if it had survived, would have had the smallest population base in the country.

Beadle said a population of 210,000 in Utah County was supporting the local bureau, a relatively small number.

Beadle said no one was to blame for the closing of the bureau. He said BBB officials hoped eventually, within the next couple of years, the bureau would again try and open another office in the county.

Engemann said it would be wise for the bureau to start out with a branch and "baby step its way in," before opening a full-fledged office again.

She said the bureau has struggled for three years to keep its doors open, and it was a relief to have it all over.

Beadle said all phone calls will be handled through a trunk line hooked up to the original Provo lines. He said all complaints are usually handled in writing, so the general structure of handling consumer problems would remain the same.

Extra load

Beadle emphasized that plans are not finalized yet, and it would take a couple months to see how the Salt Lake City chapter of the BBB would handle the extra load.

Engemann said people are still coming by the Provo BBB offices for help with consumer problems, but, she said, "the BBB doors are closed."

Preliminary hearing set in Bishop case

By TOM LOWERY
Staff Writer

Douglas D. Bishop, 23, of Hinckley, Utah, appeared in 8th Circuit Court in Orem Wednesday for a first appearance hearing on charges of sodomy upon a child.

Bishop, arrested in Wendover, Nev., on July 28, waived extradition Monday and was returned to Orem on Wednesday, said Ron Allen, a detective for the Orem Police Department. Bishop was held at the Orem City Jail until the hearing at 2 p.m.

Bishop appeared before Judge Robert J. Summison and was informed of charges against him.

Summison advised him of his rights to a preliminary hearing and an attorney.

Bishop said he couldn't afford an attorney.

Summison then appointed a public defender to represent him and scheduled a preliminary hearing for Aug. 22 to determine probable cause. If the court finds probable cause for prosecution, Bishop will bound over to 4th District Court for arraignment.

Summison ordered that bail remain at $25,000 and remanded Bishop to the custody of the Utah County Sheriff pending the preliminary hearing.

If convicted, Bishop could be sentenced to five years to life in the Utah State Prison and ordered to pay a $15,000 fine.

Rescue force recovers three rafters from river

By LES CARROLL
Staff Writer

Three Utah County residents are safe today after being rescued from the Provo River on Tuesday night by members of the Utah County Search and Rescue team.

Gary Stubbs and Rick Broadbent of Provo, and Koni Rae Peck of Payson, were stranded on a rock in the middle of the river for an hour before jeep patrol volunteers and Search and Rescue Coordinator Owen Quarnburg helped them ashore.

The three were coming down the river from Deer Creek in a raft when they hit rough water. Their raft filled up, and they made their way to a large rock in the middle of the river.

When they tried to tip the raft and empty the water, the current caught the raft and took it downstream, leaving the three stranded about a quarter mile west of Bridal Veil Falls, Stubbs said.

"I don't think we were ever in real danger, but I was glad when the rescue team showed up," he said. "It could have been serious, but they got them out minutes after someone called them and did a tremendous job of getting us out of the mess we got ourselves into."

"We're ready to go again, but this time we'll be more prepared," he said.

The group evidently forgot to take life preservers and a rope on their trip.

Stubbs said the worst part about the trip was losing his raft.

"Someone gathered up my raft and took it home," he said. "I wish the person who has it would give it back because it was not only a nice raft, but a gift."

Utah County Sheriff Mack Holley had nothing but praise for the search and rescue team, which he said is not only a lifesaver to people, but also to the Sheriff's Office.

"We're very dependent on the search and rescue team because the county could not afford the man-hours to do some of the things they do," Holley said.

"They're all volunteers who have their own vehicles and equipment. They do a tremendous service to us and the community."

Holley said there are 50 volunteers in the jeep patrol. Within minutes Tuesday night, 21 people had responded.

Students default on loans

By ANNLEIGH MCMANIS
Staff Writer

More than $50,000 people owe the federal government $2.6 billion in defaulted Guaranteed Student Loans.

Even though the Debt Collection Act of 1982 gave the Department of Education's collection program more muscle, authorizing the government to offset federal wages, only $2.3 million was collected.

Ford Stevenson, director of BYU Financial Aids, said no matter how many people refuse to pay back federal loans, it will not affect students who apply in the future.

"As long as the legislature re-enacts the bill concerning GSLS each year, the funds will be there," Stevenson said. He said collection methods will continue to increase, and if results aren't seen in the future, perhaps, the government will cut back on loan funding.

Stevenson said about 10,000 BYU students are on loan.

Results of education study receive failing grade

By MICHELLE LEWIS
Staff Writer

Utah's graduate is not as well educated as his or her counterpart was 25 years ago, says a recent report by the Utah Foundation, a private, profit public service organization established to study the relationship between taxes and public expenditure in the state of Utah.

The statement is very misleading, said Dr. Wallace Allred, Chairman of Secondary Education and Education at BYU.

Today there are twice as many students in school so this will naturally cut the overall percentages, he said.

Twenty-five to 30 years ago they were educating only a select few; today we have a much higher percentage going to school, he said.

Research by Allred shows that in 1925 percent of black children finished high school and 56 percent of white children finished high school. Today, 75 percent of black children finish high school while 85 percent of white children finish. We are no longer to certain income levels, said Allred.

This is a real plus for the system of a black eye," he said.

With increasing student enrollment ment — Utah having the highest growth rate in the nation — several other problems surface.

The State Board of Education estimates that between 1980 and 1985 total enrollment in Utah public schools will increase by over 70,000 students. The board further estimates that between 1985 and 1988 public school enrollments will increase by an additional 60,000 students.

The combined impact of the natural increase with a sluggish economy is making it extremely difficult to finance Utah's public school system, the Foundation said.

The growing student population is increasing the cost of operating and maintaining the school system. Between 1960 and 1970, operating expenses rose from $25.0 million to $177.5 million. Between 1970 and 1980 these expenses increased to $515.0 million.

In the current fiscal year, operating expenses have grown to $687.3 million. With the student growth expected during the 1980s, operating expenses could easily exceed $1 billion by the end of the decade, the Foundation said.

The state has established a school building program fund so local school districts may receive financial assistance for building construction from the state, said the Foundation. The source of these funds, however, is the taxpayer.

Parents, whose children are currently in school, do not seem to mind the school taxes. Businesses, retired individuals, etc., seem to be the ones opposed, Allred said.

A second problem is that existing school facilities will be insufficient to house the increased number of students.

According to the State Board of Education, the cost of building the additional facilities needed for the 1980s will be approximately $1.4 billion.

Allred said because of the tremendous financial problems facing the state, we must somehow adapt the existing school system so as to more effectively use school buildings and to accommodate the additional students.

This must be done without substantially increasing expenditures or decreasing the quality of the educational experience.

New courses are continually being added to the school library, yet nothing is ever removed, Allred said. Unfortunately, for these additions to take place, something else must be crowded — this is what is currently happening in the system.

The 1981 and 1982 Legislature appropriated $200,000 to fund several productivity studies. This was increased to $300,000 by the 1983 session.

This study involves competency rather than seat-time as an alternative way of earning school credit. This would allow a student to test out of a subject, by passing at a prescribed level, a pre-test on material covered.

"The problem with this is that the teacher would then teach for competency rather than to excite or motivate the student," Allred said. "Also, who would decide the competency level?"

A second study will examine current technological advancements and their use in public schools.

"A computer class has recently been added to the teaching degree requirement to ensure that the teacher is familiar with the computer," Allred said. The students now have computers in their homes, so the teachers must be prepared.

The third study will offer incentives to teachers to increase teacher productivity without reducing the quality of the educational program offered.

The National Commission on Excellence in Education proposed paying incentive salaries for "master teachers" in hopes of attracting the best college students into teaching.

However, the majority of organized teacher groups oppose any salary program based on merit or performance.

These educational studies are being conducted in nearby school districts in hopes of providing valuable information and direction for solving some of the problems confronting Utah's public school system, said the Foundation.

Results will not be available until the end of this year.

Allred feels the biggest problem in today's school system is keeping the public informed of what is going on.

Elder Richards to speak

Elder Franklin D. Richards, a member of the presidency of the First Quorum of Seventy of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, will speak at the BYU 14-state fireside Sunday night.

The public is invited to attend the fireside that will begin at 7:30 p.m. in the Marriott Center.

The fireside will be broadcast live on KBYU-TV and will be televised on KBYU-TV Tuesday at 9 p.m. and Aug. 14 at 6 p.m.

students receive loans from the government each year. There is no way for the government to determine what the delinquency rate on GSLs is for any one university.

"The federal government hasn't come up with a data collection method of that type yet," he said.

Heffen Jones, director of Utah Higher Education Association, said the GSL program is notorious for not collecting delinquent loans.

He said the government is tightening controls and requiring collection agencies to step up collection methods. Utah is making an honest effort to contact delinquent borrowers.

There is no difficulty in collecting on BYU loans, Stevenson said, but there are always a few individual problems.

The default rate on BYU loans is 0.5 percent, and compared to the national default rate of 16 percent for loans similar to BYU's, Stevenson said BYU is lucky.

BYU's default rate is low "because we stay on top of our collection agency, and we also work with good clientele," he said.

BYU long-term loans are similar to GSLs, but students are required to work part-time to receive a BYU loan.

Guaranteed student loans can exceed the $3,000 limit of a BYU long-term loan.

When students are 10 days late on a loan payment a letter is sent, Stevenson said. If no response is received after the initial letter, more letters are sent and telephone calls are made to the borrower.

"If we don't get results, we turn the account over to a collection agency," he said. "If the collection agency doesn't get results, they sue the borrower in court."

In Utah, the collection letter system is used to collect delinquent GSLs. If the borrower is a resident of Utah, Jones said, the problem can be turned over to Utah's attorney general. He is empowered to take the money out of state income tax returns.

"The majority of students who get GSLs are honest people," he said. "Those that are not, we try to contact by letter on the last good address we have."

President Benson turns 84

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Ezra Taft Benson, president of the Council of the Twelve Apostles of the LDS Church, celebrates his 84th birthday today.

President Benson is by tradition the next in line to assume the church's presidency.

Jerry Cahill, spokesman for The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, said President Benson would spend the day working at his office, as he has since becoming a member of the quorum in 1943.

President Benson, secretary of agriculture in the Eisenhower administration, is to be honored by church employees this afternoon and is to attend a family dinner this evening, Cahill said.

President Benson has been president of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles since Dec. 30, 1973. By church tradition, the president of the council ascends to the church presidency. LDS Church President Spencer W. Kimball is 88.

President Benson was born Aug. 4, 1899 in Whitney, Idaho, and was a county agricultural agent before serving on a four-member agricultural committee serving President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Two men indicted for counterfeiting

Article on insurance fraud draws criticism from agent

By DAN HARRIS Senior Reporter

A recently printed Universe article on insurance fraud has raised many eyebrows, according to Scott Randall, a local insurance agent who was named in the article.

"I received quite a few phone calls about it," Randall said. "People really did not understand. It was taken negatively by many people."

The article was on the front page of the July 26 edition of The Universe and was titled, "Insurance fraud being investigated."

The story mentioned an investigation that was being conducted by the Utah State Insurance department on agents that advertise health insurance policies that include maternity benefits.

Several agents are being investigated concerning specific complaints of alleged misconduct. Randall is one of the agents named in the article that is not being investigated concerning complaints of misconduct but has been reviewed in the general investigation.

Randall said more than six fellow agents, some BYU administrators and several clients have called him concerning the article.

"Readers of the article did not quite draw out of the story that I had not done anything wrong," Randall said.

Fred Baird, market conduct examiner for the Utah State Insurance Department, said he had not done any examination work concerning specific allegations on Randall.

He said he spent half an hour with Randall and had stopped in on him without any advance notice. "I looked over Randall's operation and found it to be a very clean operation, as far as I can tell," Baird said.

Because of the interest the article has drawn, Baird said his department will postpone the completion of the investigation until a future time.

Stone completes successful tour

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz, was urged Wednesday to pursue seriously an apparently conciliatory gesture by Cuban President Fidel Castro on the conflict in Central America.

A bipartisan delegation of House and Senate leaders, emerging from a two-hour breakfast meeting with Shultz at the State Department, said they were leaving with a clear impression that the Reagan administration will follow up on Castro's overture.

"Given the fact that Castro has been the principal exporter of trouble down there, these apparent conciliatory statements ought to be pursued and I think will be pursued," Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., told reporters jobless workers and their families — 19 million people.

The vote, far short of the two-thirds necessary to override the president, followed a retort by White House spokesman Larry Speakes that Reagan is firmly opposed to "another expensive bureaucracy."

Before the final showdown, Republicans failed, 255-171, to slash the price tag of the program to $1.8 billion, an approach eyed by the GOP-controlled Senate.

Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., had promised the House would pass the measure, and declared Reagan would be "pretty hard-hearted" to veto it.

O'Neill was asked about Reagan's complaint that the House measure does not contain specific revenue-raising provisions to pay for the program, and thus could deepen the federal deficit.

The House bill provides $4 billion in federal grants to the states, which would have to provide matching funds ranging from zero to 20 percent, depending on their unemployment rate. A small amount of the money would be available for the short time remaining in fiscal 1983 and the rest over the next two years.

LDS Church grows in Africa Religion major force in lives

By KENT JORGENSEN Staff Writer

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has had an instrumental effect on the people of Ghana Africa, said Banyon Dadson, visiting chemistry professor from Ghana Africa.

Dadson, second counselor in the Ghana district of the Africa West Mission of the LDS church, said the church is growing rapidly in Ghana. There are about 1,000 members.

The LDS Church has received national attention and has become very popular since it recently supplied the people of Ghana with food and medical supplies, Dadson said. The church has also had an impact in teaching the African people how to produce their own food, he said. "You can give a man a fish and feed him for a day or you can teach a man how to fish and feed him for a life time." This is what the church has done, Dadson said.

Because of the help of the LDS Church, the government is beginning to relax its laws and soon missionary work will progress in great ways, Dadson said. There are two couple missionaries in Ghana and a third set have recently been approved.

The people of Africa are a spiritual people and religion is a major force in most Africans lives, he said. It is not uncommon for people to contact missionaries on the street and ask them questions concerning religion, he said.

Dadson, a member of the church for 3 1/2 years, joined soon after it was formally organized in Africa in 1978.

He is currently the chairman and dean of chemistry at Cape Coast University in Ghana. He has been visiting BYU since the beginning of summer term and will be staying until Aug. 20.

"BYU is simply beautiful," he said.

Editor creates balance for alumni

By ANNLEIGH MCMANIS Staff Writer

Taking over as editor of an alumni publication can be an onerous task, but Jim Bell sees it as a chance to expand and prove the in-house publication. Bell, the newly-appointed editor wants to tell the BYU Today story. He said Ken Shelton, former editor of BYU Today, did a very good job and made vast improvements in the magazine, but he said their approaches are different.

Bell explained that Shelton was not only editor for the publication, but also did a lot of the writing. Bell said he took position as editor of BYU Today with understanding that he was the editor, the writer, and that his goal would be to get others to write and contribute. "I'm trying to identify what's going on, campus and who's doing what," he said. "I said they hope to use professors to write articles, freelance writers and post-graduate students." "We will be selective in who we use," he said.

More than 200,000 people are on BYU Today's mailing list, Bell said. The organization has taken place at BYU Today, Bell said, adding that he has put more about the campus up front. "I hope to have a better balance between features (news of the university)," Bell said. Bell took over as editor, Bell said, BYU Today shows an aerial view of the BYU campus.

When Shelton was the editor, Bell said the issues centered around a theme. He hopes to break away from that type of format. Also, BYU Today publishes eight times a year, and Bell said he hopes that eventually it will change to six times a year. This would help the staff to work further in advance and develop a backlog of ideas and stories. "By doing this we can always pick and choose, and have more freedom and flexibility," he said.

Bell said he wants BYU Today to have an intellectual approach and act as a means for continuing an alumni's education.

Although, he said there are still "hugs" to be worked out in the new format of BYU Today, he said he feels that by Jan. 1, 1984, things will be put together, and the difficulties ironed out. "By then, people will see my mark on it," Bell said.

"The administration is very supportive of what I'm doing with BYU Today," he said. "The administration has given me guidelines, freedom and flexibility that is conducive to producing a very fine magazine."

Before becoming editor of BYU Today, Bell was a technical writer for Wicat Systems Inc. of Orem. Previously he worked for BYU Press, as a book editor and production manager. Bell also teaches English at BYU as a part-time professor, having received his masters in English from BYU in 1979.

There are some questions about how BYU Media Services is going to operate in the future, said Dean VanUitert, acting executive director of Media Services.

VanUitert, former assistant executive director of Media Services, is taking the place of Bill Farnsworth, who is retiring August 31.

He said he is taking the position as acting director while the Council of Twelve of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints studies the media production program at BYU.

The study will resolve a number of questions concerning media services and the church," VanUitert said. He said the study is not to separate BYU Media Services from the services BYU provides for the church, but to make the dual role of BYU financially compatible.

The Media Services program is currently divided into five different departments. The Media Production department is responsible for educational television programs, producing films such as "John Baker's Last Run" and producing filmstrips.

The Broadcast Services department is responsible for KBYU-TV and KBYU-FM.

The Electronic Media department is responsible for design installation and maintenance. VanUitert said that the department helped create the new concert sound system for the Marriott Center to feed into the present BYU sound system.

The Instruction Support System of Media Services operates the sound systems of BYU. VanUitert said this area of media services played a key role in the sound system for the Manti Pageant this year. The final department, audio visual services, is the marketing agent for media production.

He said he feels the main goal of Media Services is to provide students with work and experience in all areas of media.

Should you wait for a problem to get your family's eyes checked?

You get your teeth checked regularly. Remember, without fail, to get the kids' booster shots. And yet, most people don't stop to take care of their family's most precious gift—eyesight—until there's a problem.

But the truth is, your eyes can change in a matter of months without your even knowing it, keeping you from seeing things as clearly and crisply as possible.

That's why a regular eye exam is so important. It helps keep your eyesight sharp. And it can correct a little problem before it gets started on its way to becoming a big one.

At Pearl we set aside August as Family Eye Care Month in the hopes you'll make this regular eye exam a habit. And, along with this special month, we'll give you something else to help you remember. A Family Health Record Booklet.*

KEEP UP WITH YOUR CHECKUPS.

With this booklet you'll be able to keep your health appointments separate from all the everyday notes jotted down here and there. So you'll always be on top of dental appointments, physicals — and from now on, a yearly eye checkup.

After all, there are so many beautiful things to be seen every day. Make sure you're seeing them the way they're meant to be seen.

*While supplies last.

August is Family Eye Care Month at Pearl.

Utah's Big Four mentors meet

Grid coaches preview 1983

By SCOTT TAYLOR
Staff Writer

With the four major Utah collegiate football teams starting practice later this month, the four coaches met with local sports writers and sportscasters Wednesday in Salt Lake City.

Head Football Coaches Lavell Edwards, Chuck Stobart, Chris Pella and Mike Price of BYU, Utah, Utah State and Weber State, respectively, all took advantage of the opportunity to talk about their teams' potential for the upcoming season.

The gathering was in conjunction with the annual Beehive Boot competition between the four schools. The traveling trophy is awarded to the university that compiles the best record against in-state rivals. Utah State won the trophy last year after defeating BYU and Weber State, having lost only to Utah.

In analyzing their respective teams and schedules, the coaches each took turns expressing concerns, flaunting strengths, confirming weaknesses and sharing superlatives.

Edwards, who has built the BYU program into one of the nation's top passing attacks, expressed confidence in his receiving corps and in his returning signal caller Steve Young. Edwards said he expects Young to have a year at least equal to the past, pressure-filled year.

"I don't think people fully appreciate the pressure he was under last year, coming on the heels of Jim McMahon," he said.

"One area where we have some concern is the experience of our offensive and defensive linemen," Edwards later said. "If you don't have offensive linemen to control the defense, you can't do anything."

Eight of last year's nine starting linemen have graduated from the BYU squad, with only Brandon Plint, a defensive lineman, returning to the lineup.

Stobart, in his second year at the Utah helm, has a strong defensive unit return, solidified by shuffling personnel between the defensive secondary and the linebacking squad.

His concern, though, is the lack of depth on the Utah team. "We have a real depth problem. Our success will depend on how well our freshmen players can back up our starters."

Stobart has given transfer quarter Mark Stevens the preseason nod as Utah quarterback. "In my opinion, it's going to be fun to watch Steve Young," (Marty) Louthan of Air Force and Mark Stevens.

First-year Aggie mentor Pella expressed optimism for a successful Utah State football season, likening his pass-oriented team to the San Diego Chargers of National Football League. "But I think we have the potential to highlight our running game, too," he added.

"One of my goals when I took over was to start a new-era philosophy," Pella said, adding that he has started fulfilling his goal by creating new-look offensive and defensive formations as well as outfitting the team in new uniforms.

Pella, who has two starting quarterbacks returning from last year's team, has said he is planning on going with transfer quarterback Gym Kimball, who redshirted last season after leaving BYU for the Aggie program.

Price's Weber State squad has been projected by most preseason polls to finish last in the Big Sky Conference. Yet Price is determined to improve upon last season's 4-7 Wildcat record.

The team motto this season, according to Price, is "to turn an underdog into a wonderdog."

Weber State, however, will not compete against any of the three other Utah teams.

If there was to be an award given for the most unique player description, perhaps it would be given to Weber State's Price, who promoted a line-man's talents by saying, "Every time he takes a breath, he gets better."

Promos for Hudson, Young directed at national media

By MIKE GRAME
Staff Writer

When BYU's Rocky Mountain connection of Steve Young and Gordon Hudson takes to the gridiron this fall, more than just defensive secondaries will be taking notice.

Dave Schulthess, BYU sports information director, will make sure of that.

With tight end Hudson catching practically everything quarterback Young throws his way, both will be receiving attention from the nation's sports writers and readers.

Campaigns underway

Schulthess is already coordinating a campaign whose goal is All-America honors for both Young and Hudson.

Of course, everything depends on the performance of the athletes, said Schulthess, but they also have to get national attention. His plan includes "phone calls, letters, timing, pushing and some arm-twisting here and there."

Hudson, a consensus All-American last year, left last Friday for the National Football Writers Convention at Kings Island, Ohio. From there, he was invited to join the ABC-NCAA football promotion tour.

Five or six players are selected nationally each year for the tour. Previous BYU selections included Gifford Nielsen and Jim McMahon.

Young has been busy off the field, too. He will be appearing in several television spots for the prevention of drug abuse, said Schulthess.

Having an All-American is good for the university, according to Schulthess. Aside from the direct publicity, it brings people to the campus, which in turn gains additional exposure for the school.

"A lot of people think BYU is a 'church' school, with people running around in black stockings and collars. They don't realize we are a reputable university."

So the campaign goes on.

Videos mailed out

Video tapes have been mailed to major television stations around the nation, said Schulthess. Follow-up telephone calls will be made. Hijinx — the circus approach — will be avoided.

The job is made difficult because of BYU's location and competition, but the situation is getting better.

"Twenty years ago, nobody in their wildest dreams would have imagined a season starting with Georgia and ending with Ohio State," said Schulthess.

This season's games with Baylor and UCLA could get the kind of national attention needed by the All-America candidates, he added.

Before Mark Wilson, Utah's only two gridiron All-Americans were the Olsen brothers — Merin and Phil — of Utah State, according to Schulthess.

Four All-Americans

Since then, BYU has had four: Wilson, McMahon, Hudson and Nick Eyre.

"We'd actually like to see Steve get Academic All-American," said Schulthess. Young is a 3.38 student in accounting and international relations.

Schulthess added that the Davey O'Brien Award is another of the campaign's goal. Jim McMahon won the award, for the nation's best quarterback, in it's first year.

But as for Hudson, a returning consensus All-American — what is left for Cougar tight end?

"The Heisman is always a possibility," said Schulthess.

Kuhn resigns baseball commission despite supporters urge to continue

BOSTON (AP) — Bowie Kuhn abdicated baseball's throne Wednesday, giving up his futile fight to keep the commissioner's job and ending a bitter power struggle that he said could have permanently damaged the game.

Kuhn, with only 10 days left in office after 15 years as baseball's fifth commissioner, told owners gathered to replace him at their summer meeting that he no longer would be a candidate to succeed himself.

It had become apparent before then that he couldn't have won anyway, but Kuhn said that had he and his supporters continued their determined bid to save his job, "the game would go through a terrible ordeal . . . and it would make it more difficult to find a new commissioner."

"The acrimony would clearly have continued," he said, "and I just didn't see it as a good thing for baseball."

By a unanimous vote of owners, Kuhn said he would continue as commissioner until Dec. 31 or until a new commissioner can be elected, whichever comes first. His second, seven-year term of office was scheduled to end Aug. 12.

Kuhn called his decision "final, irrevocable and emphatic." He said he would not reconsider even if, Dec. 31 approached, his supporters continued to urge him to fight for the job.

Akkord' spells music for four Y students

By MARK DUFF
Staff Writer

Music is spelled A-K-K-O-R-D—at least by four Y students.

Chip Prince, a senior from Lancaster, N.H., Lorentzen, a senior from Port Angeles, Wash., his wife, Laura Lorentzen, a senior from Nov., and Sheri Hall, a senior from Cedar Rapids, Iowa, formed the group Akkord last year. Prince, musical director for the Sundance Summer Theater, said the group was originally formed in the four singers were in BYU's A Cappella choir last year.

When the choir tours, it is common for its members to prepare solo numbers, he said. Usually they are classical arias.

"We wanted to do something different," Prince said. "Since John had a similar group in his hometown we decided to sing 'A Nightingale in Barkley Square.'"

Prince said since Akkord wanted to use the choir to perform on tour, they kept in close touch.

"Dr. Ralph Woodward, a professor of music director of the A Cappella Choir," Prince said. Woodward disapproves of many vocalists' techniques," Prince said, "and we wanted to make our song was OK vocally and style-wise."

Woodward liked the song and style and allowed them to perform on the choir's northwestern tour.

Because of audience acceptance, he said, they decided to formally organize Akkord.

"I'm not sure when our name first popped up," he said. "The word is German for 'chord'... at first I thought it was just a name for the group."

Prince Lorentzen said the group's name probably came about because of the influence classical music had on each of them.

"Classical music was all I listened to," Prince said. Later he began listening to popular music to broaden his horizons.

"A musician who can mix the two will be a better musician," he said.

The A Cappella Choir has helped almost all of its members read music and has helped train their ears to hear the close intervals and sing in harmony, he said.

"The only person not helping in this way is A. K. K. O. R. D.," he said, "and everybody watches me. We are all active in the decision-making of the group."

musical arrangements are even created by members of the group," Hall said. "John composes some of the music for the group and Chip and John make new arrangements of old songs."

The arrangements are generally Manhattan Transfer songs, he said. In addition, folk, pop and Top 40 songs are performed.

Because of singing so many different styles of music, acting is as important a part of each performance as singing, Mrs. Lorentzen said.

"Each song you sing has a mood and to make the words work you have to convey those moods through tones, posture and excitement," Prince said.

Akkord tries to make each performance visually exciting to create a fun atmosphere, Hall said.

"The visual excitement is augmented by intricate harmonies," Lorentzen said. "We love performing. People see that love and enjoy the music all the more."

Local performances have given the group a solid background on stage, Hall said.

But performing locally is not the main goal of the group, Mrs. Lorentzen said. Because of contacts in Nevada, Akkord is looking to perform professionally in Reno.

Akkord has performed with the Ralph Woodward Chorale and in the annual Young Artists in Concert.

Bands to present own original music at campus concert

By BRENDA SUN
Staff Writer

Three local rock groups — Thunderback Ram, Up & Ups, and Tempest — will perform Saturday at "Rock the Quad," BYU's first outdoor concert that will feature all original music.

The concert will be open to the public for those 18 and above. Barbeque grills, tables, rootbeer and games will be provided throughout the three-hour concert.

"The activity is totally free and we want everybody to come and have fun," said Michael Wood, ASBYU special events chairman. "We hope that the concert will give the students a chance to become more aware of the bands available to them, and hopefully help them better appreciate local original music," Wood said.

"On the other hand, it's also our goal to provide original musical groups with more exposure to the audience in order to encourage more bands in the valley to write and perform their own works," he said.

"Rock the Quad" is not only the first original music concert for BYU, but also for the three performing groups.

For Thunderback Ram, who have opened concerts for such major acts as Fleetwood Mac, Joe Walsh and The James Gang, the concert is "a golden opportunity to expose our original music to the public," said Mike Spencer, a member of the band.

Up & Ups, which is currently in the pre-production stages for an album to be released in December, consider the concert "a big step in trying out our original material," said Richard Clark, lead guitarist for the group. Up & Ups music is kind of "new wave-journey," Clark said.

Tempest, which is currently negotiating with Cougar Cable Network about a musical program for the fall semester, thinks the concert is the best way to find out what the students and local community want. The group's original music focuses on the "album-oriented/underground top 40," according to Doug Lyman, keyboard player for the group.

The concert is important, because such famous musical groups as Santana, Jefferson Airplane and The Steve Miller Band started out with free concert performances, Wood said.

"We want to create a musical renaissance at the Y in the way it was done in the late 60s with bands doing freebies at the Golden Gate Park," he said.

"We hope that both Y students and the performing groups will benefit from the activity."

The concert will be at 6 p.m. on the Kimball Tower/Joseph Smith Building quad. The activity will be video-taped to be shown in the step-down lounge in the Wilkinson Center in September.

CLASS (R) — Annapolis Blast stars in this comedy-drama about a young man who has an affair with an older woman, and then discovers she is his mother's mistress. This one does not live up to its title.

THE CONFESSIONS OF FELIX KRULL (International Cinema) — Story of a confidence man who works his way up to nobility. The king of Thomas Mann's satire in this turn-of-the-century but sprawling satire Europe from Berlin to Paris and London, from social occasion to the surface, but it's delightful entertainment all the same. In German with subtitles.

FLASHDANCE (R) — A film with a weak plot which is used as a showcase for dancing. The story concerns around an 18-year-old girl who has never had dance lessons whose dream is to dance with the Flashdance Ball Theater. Excellent dancing, strong language and some nudity.

GRAND ILLUSION (International Cinema) — Near the top of any list of the great films must come this anti-war classic. Directed by Jean Renoir. In French with subtitles.

JAWS 3-D (PG) — The second sequel to Steven Spielberg's enormous hit, "Jaws," this time with the action taking place in a Florida marina. Predictable but good 3-D effects, some romance and lots of suspense. Violence, profanity.

KILLER (PG) — An adventure-some story set in the future but with a medieval tone. An unimpressive and simplistic tale. Violence, gore.

OCCEPUS (PG) — Great cast and work and adventure makes this Bond movie entertaining. Roger Moore looks a little older than he is, but is still able to come to the rescue. Expect the usual sea battles with special imitations and beautiful women.

THE PROMISE (PG) — Separated by a shocking auto accident, a wealthy young couple meet, and his indignant girl friend becomes the victim of his mother. For the romantic at heart because this one tends to be a bit sentimental.

RETURN OF THE JEDI (PG) — The continuation of the "Star Wars" saga of the struggle between good and evil. Luke Skywalker, Princess Leia and Han Solo battle Darth Vader in this exciting and successful film. Excellent special effects, a good story and a moral. Even better than the other films in the series. Violence.

SNOW WHITE AND THE SEVEN DWARFS (G) — This Disney classic was the first feature-length cartoon and it holds up today as a monument to the genius of its creator.

STAYING ALIVE (PG) — John Travolta returns in this follow-up to Saturday Night Fever. Sylvester Stallone directs, coproduces and co-writes this one. Excellent score and music.

SWAMP THING (PG) — This episode of the Civil War is perhaps the most beautiful and fiery seldom before accomplished. James Stewart is a widowed Virginian who has attempted to make his land an island, sheltered from the horrors of the war.

SPACE RAIDERS (PG) — A "Star Wars" imitation that falls short of its intentions.

SUPERMAN III (PG) — Christopher Reeve is back, with Richard Pryor as a comic villain who uses kryptonite to make Superman schizophrenic. Quite different from the first two films and not as good. Violence, profanity.

SWAMP THING (PG) — The hideous monster with the tender heart emerges from the comic book page for an action-packed adventure. The creature must control the We're shedding light on special phone needs.

For someone with a hearing difficulty, this phone can shed some light on the problem. Because when it rings, the light starts flashing. And on the inside of the handset, there could be a volume control to amplify the caller's voice. So even though someone might not hear as well as other people, that person can use the phone just as well as anyone.

And that's the whole idea behind the Mountain Bell Telecommunications Center for Disabled Customers. Helping people with phones like this one so a disability won't be a barrier to phone conversation.

At the Center, we have phones and equipment that can help with a hearing or vision disability. Impaired speech. And limited mobility. And if we don't already have an answer to a specific phone need, we'll work to find one.

If you, or someone you know, could use our special phones and services, we'd like to hear from you. Call us, toll-free, at our Telecommunications Center for Disabled Customers any weekday from 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. (The numbers are listed below.) Or call at your convenience and leave a recorded message. We'll get back to you the next business day. So you'll have a phone you can use when you want to use the phone.

Modern students enjoy luxuries

To our parents and grandparents who attended BYU and other universities, today's student must seem rather "spoiled." Such luxuries as private-bedroom condos, sports cars with moon roofs and cable TV are beginning to become the standard for student life rather than the exception.

It wasn't long ago that students were arriving into Provo by train or bus with just enough money to pay a month's room and board in some hostel-type facility that was more like a barracks than anything else. One of these on-campus dorms was Knight-Mangum Hall. It consisted of up to four bunk beds per room, with general bathroom and shower facilities for each floor. Students ate their meals in a Quonset hut that doubled as a cafeteria and spare classroom.

Entertainment for these yearling students was not so ubiquitous as it is today. If sitting around the radio listening to Amos and Andy wasn't enough, students could drive to American Fork for an open-air dancing to the tunes of Wes Barry and his orchestra.

Such a "variety" of attractions would obviously be too boring for today's sophisticated and style-conscious students. Many would complain bitterly if they had to survive without their M-TV, stereo sets, videotapes and electronic games.

Poor housing
A severe housing shortage after the war gave rise to the numbers of makeshift living quarters, which forced some students to live in unheated, hole-in-the-wall, basement apartments. One young man bought a barrel of wheat and actually lived in a cave near Rock Canyon. Similarly, a girl, who was living in the back of a car during the Winter semester, suffocated because she used a charcoal oven to keep warm. Though these cases were indeed rare, the general populace at BYU was truly surviving on the necessities and was far less fortunate than we today, who are blessed so abundantly with all the modern conveniences.

Market change
But the term "spoiled" is incorrect. The housing market and the economy in general are completely different today. Students actually spend a smaller percentage of their earnings on food and housing than those attending BYU 30 years ago.

It is also unfair to state that the challenges and struggles of former students were any more difficult than they are today; they are merely different challenges and struggles. Students of the 40s and 50s were never faced with problems of overcrowded parking lots, nor did they have to worry about keeping cars in repair because they usually didn't have one.

We today are burdened by our own luxuries. Homework often gives way to pool parties, cable TV or spa visits. The once nightly feasts of delicacies, video arcades and fast-food restaurants. All of this can have the effect of dulling our desires to learn and can make a night in the library seem rather bland.

With modern-day luxuries and conveniences so prevalent, students become lulled into thinking that campus life without them is not really living. Such students sign contracts for apartments with all the "extras" and then complain the prices are too high. Such thinking is obviously based on an illogical assumption that housing and simple economics are not related. It is interesting to note that many of these same students are in serious debt and are still borrowing their way into deeper trouble every semester.

Savings on rent
If students wish to avoid debt and save money while attending school, they can start by renting a four- to six-person apartment without the extras such as cable TV, hot tubs, saunas, microwaves, dishwashers and "exclusive landscaping." Basic one-bedroom units can be found for $55 or less this fall and is sure to save students quite a few dollars and maybe some extra time for studying. Such "self denial of worldly goods" could also bring us closer to our counterparts of yesterday and help us appreciate their unique hardships and battles.

Today's students are not inherently "spoiled," nor are they prone to overwhelming indebtedness until they graduate. They have only become subjects to our own passions, desires and appetites and must therefore reap the benefits or consequences of their chosen lifestyle habits.

'Star Wars' plan is still aggressive

Editor:
Kevin Gray's letter to the editor "Deterrence not enough" (July 28) is another example of those people who would much rather "physically prevent" nuclear war by building bigger, better and more weapons rather than by promoting peace and higher morals with our enemies. True, "star wars" strategies could make nuclear weapons obsolete and discourage any use of them, but that's what we thought nuclear weapons would do to conventional warfare back in 1945. Unfortunately that has not been the case. If Kevin's and Reagan's plan goes off effect, by the end of this century we could have our own "Star Wars Death Star" in order to discourage any enemy aggression. But of course we would call it a "Defense Star"—that is until the Russians developed one too.

George Mark England Provo

Commentary neglected the worst

Editor:
The July 21 editorial on the Soviet Union (Samantha) drew mixed emotions from me. I concur with Mr. Dew in that Mr. Stout's commentary was somewhat flawed, but only because he neglected some of the more blatant and inhumane violations of the Soviets.

Mr. Dew seems to imply that Americans should feel guilty while Soviets should not. However, Mr. Andropov and the Soviet Union deserve to be ridiculed as well as condemned for their blatant and imperialistic aggression in Afghanistan.

tan. Millions of Afghans have been murdered in the Soviet quest for a warm-water port. In addition the Soviet use of chemical warfare directly violated the Geneva accord; the Afghans who recently lectured on campus provided ample evidence of that.

Mr. Dew also seems to have forgotten other horrors of communist totalitarianism such as the genocide in Cambodia, the boat people in Vietnam or the Soviet extermination of 40 million of their own inhabitants. I see no reason to assume they would not inflict the same atrocities on us if they had the chance.

Recently, the man who shot the pope confessed of his links with Bulgaria and the Russian KGB. A nation that truly supported peace would not attempt to kill a world symbol of it.

In general, the Russian people are like us. However, the consciousness of the Russian people is not that of the Russian leaders (see Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn). Those who have seriously read these leaders, along with U.S. intelligence reports, know that they desire world superiority and domination. This motivation separates their actions from ours in a qualitative way.

Although America has weaknesses, it does not compare with the vast atrocities of the Soviets. In addition, the motivations behind our policies are generally different. We desire peace not world domination. We desire to prevent communist bloodbaths not to support them. Finally, the solicitation of friendship with the Soviets was seriously attempted during the Carter administration. The Soviets did not reciprocate our efforts at friendship; they only used these efforts to manipulate us. Please do not get me wrong; I think we should negotiate with the Russians and make sincere efforts to communicate. However, these negotiations should not degenerate into appeasement. Because of recent Soviet actions and deteriorative effects to past negotiations, it is naive to look towards negotiations as a sole solution to our problems. In addition, we should not be afraid to call a spade a

Wages don't indicate worth

The person who does the most good for society should probably get paid the most. That's the way the theory goes, but the opposite is usually true. The July 1983 Reader's Digest lists the average hourly wages of several occupations and individuals. The copyrighted list was originally printed in the February 1983 Playboy magazine.

The lowest hourly rate, based on an average 40-hour work week, was the occupation of a priest in Los Angeles, receiving $2.16 per hour.

Other low-end categories include, Private 1st Class in the U.S. Army with $4.04 per hour, bank teller with $4.98 per hour and a farm laborer with $4.33 per hour.

The middle-range incomes included: truck driver with $8.25 per hour, grade-school teacher with $9.20 per hour, reporter with $9.58, author, $10.53, steelworker—$10.67, auto assembly-line worker—$11.80, San Francisco bus driver—$12.12, university instructor with $12.48 and a New York Philharmonic musician with $17.50 per hour.

Some of the higher incomes listed include: dentist with $26.32 per hour, Secretary of State George Shultz with $38.51 per hour, Chief Justice Warren Burger with $48.41 per hour, anesthesiologist with $57.02 per hour, National Basketball Association player with $118.27 per hour, John McEnroe, tournament earnings of $495.16 per hour and Raleigh Warner, Jr., chairman of Mobil Corp., with $673.08 per hour.

Now to the extreme: Burt Reynolds, based on two films a year, gets $4,807.69 per hour.

Almost $5,000 an hour for Burt Reynolds? If the person who has done the least for society received the most, I wouldn't question Burt Reynolds's wages.

But what has Burt Reynolds done for the world to justify $5,000 an hour?

He has made some OK movies, but he has also made some downgrading, trashy ones too. Burt Reynolds movies will probably never make the classic list.

Why does society reward Burt Reynolds so abundantly for what he does? Perhaps the money he gets is not a reward, perhaps it is his curse. Oh that more of us may be cursed?

Of course I would probably feel differently if I were the one getting the $4,000 an hour.

We must stop this 'meat'ing

In my uphill struggle to lose weight, I thought about giving up one of those fats, yet ridiculous diets. But instead, I attempted to become a vegetarian. One of my friends promised me I would lose weight if I became a "veggie." This diet consists of abstaining from meat (although I do eat fish to keep my sanity) and refraining from sugar. So far so good, but then again, it's only been three weeks.

It's surprising how much Americans revolve their entire lifestyle around meat. What is Thanksgiving without a turkey or the Fourth of July without barbecuing steak?

Probably one of the hardest things I've had to get used to was eating out. When I go into a restaurant and fiercely scan the menu, I can't but help get depressed. It's virtually impossible to order something without meat. I'm starting to get used to giving up salad every meal.

Lately I've been craving Kentucky Fried chicken and pepperoni pizza in the middle of the night. And in the mornings, I've been experiencing severe withdrawal symptoms because I can no longer enjoy bacon with my eggs.

A few weekends ago my yard had a barbecue at the canyon. We had, or I should say they had, hamburgers. The aroma of the sizzling beef still brought back fond memories of other picnicking days. I longed to sink my teeth into one of the patties. Realizing I was about to lose all willpower, I quickly grabbed a pickle and pretended it was a hamburger.

Being a vegetarian isn't all that bad. After all, a lot of important people have been vegetarians. For instance, Benjamin Franklin was a known vegetarian and he was one of the most intelligent men who ever lived, as were Albert Einstein, Leonardo DaVinci, Thomas Edison, Isaac Newton and Gandhi.

I am now proving to myself that I can sacrifice. I'm also eating a lot of different foods and almost enjoying it. I feel healthier than I have in years.

This is an easy diet to follow. All you have to do is give up steak, chicken, ham, turkey, hamburger and all your other favorite foods. I really admire anyone who has the stamina to stick with it. But after writing this editorial and enumerating all the delicious no-nos, I think I've convinced myself to go to the nearest McDonald's and order a Quarter Pounder.

Utah State should stay alcohol 'dry'

Editor:
At least seven presidents of the LDS Church, including President Spencer W. Kimball, have pleaded with the Utah community to return to and maintain complete "dry" status regarding alcoholic beverages. Why is it that the 100 percent-LDS Provo City Council and the 100 percent-LDS Utah County Commission are headed in exactly the opposite direction?

The commissioners and council members, by giving birth to tavern dancing and restaurant mini bottles, are adding more fuel to the fire at the root of the problem, ironically at the same time a California federal judge has undercut Utah's new drinking-driving law at the penalty end of the problem. Thus, it is easy to see that Provo's alcohol horrendous problem of 900 DUI/public intoxication arrests per year, plus Utah County's 150, will forever increase rather than decrease.

And the lawmakers have to bend the state law in questionable ways to accommodate this inhumane libertarian attitude of "let everybody do what they want no matter what the social or moral cost."

It turns out there is an iron-clad state law prohibiting the retail sale of beer in dance halls. But both why the county outdid the Miracle Bowl when they ruled that whereas it was obviously illegal to serve beer in a dance hall, it was definitely okay to dance in a beer hall. Abscundabare... this Bud's for you... poof! Now you have a law... now you don't. The problem our legislative forefathers discerned was that when there's a tavern dance on somewhere, lots more folks will be there drinking at that public place rather than at home. The excitement of the dance keeps the brew flowing at a heavy level, but the real fun is the demolition derby on the way home.

With the funds now flowing for the blue-collar types, the city and the county had to do something for the white-collar types. Provo first gave a mini-bottle license to R. Spencer Hines, then the Cotton Tree Inn and now to the Excelsior Hotel, where it was necessary to perform another disappearing act. The hotel is located too close to a school to qualify for a license, so the politicians swayed the state into allowing the license anyway. Abscundabare... convention city USA... poof! Now you have a business college... now you don't.

The county's recommendation for a mini-bottle license for the Sundance restaurant now opens the way for the red-collar types — those who will be maimed and killed trying to fight their way past the Tree Room drinker-drivers coming down Provo Canyon. What is to be done?

Days of '47 'beerwagon' had dignity

Editor:
(Reference: Day's of '47 "beerwagon" cartoon, July 28)

This is clever and I'm sure a bit of a spoof — but rather unfair in a way. The drivers were sober and dignified.

President Hinckley was the only General Authority in this year's parade and he received an excellent ovation from the 150,000 of people along the route, 30 percent of which were not LDS.

The Ambusher-Busch display is famous and special with such beautiful well-trained animals. They could almost be called a "national treasure" because they are so well known. We were fortunate to have them in the parade. I don't think the Word of Wisdom will be violated any more because of them. Testimonies will remain strong, and the enrollment at all people (pioneers) who came to view their stories with the interviewers.

I have been a member of the parade committee for nearly three decades. I have never seen such anticipation and loud ripples of excitement overcome the spectators, working finally into a spontaneous standing ovation all down the parade route as this St. Louis headquarters display passed by. It was great.

So don't knock it too hard. We need some of these good things to overcome our provincialism and we have them without compromising our principles.

The parade's charter says we honor all people (pioneers) who came to view their stories with the interviewers. This information, allowed to be carefully scrutinized, suddenly becomes subject to the vanities and subjectivities of the person interviewed.

John DeVillibus' column on July 28 criticizes the practice of a person's granting an interview to a newspaper reporter only if the reporter shows that person a copy of the finished story. He says, "The reporter's information, allowed to be carefully scrutinized, suddenly becomes subject to the vanities and subjectivities of the person interviewed."

I suggest that the person who is usually on the other foot? The information is originally the interviewee's, not the reporter's. An interview allows the reporter's subjectivities to come into play. A request to review a story is usually made in self defense. In interviews I have given, I have frequently been misquoted, quoted out of context, or had my meaning distorted.

If newspapers or reporters are concerned at all for accurate representation of persons' viewpoints, they will welcome the chance to view their stories with the interviewers.

Party noise excessive at DT dorm

Editor:
The administration's recent campaign to recruit students for a campus housing sadly neglects point out some of the disadvantages of living, in our case, at Deseret Towers.

The present men's dorm is situated beside the DT pool. Although this may have scenic advantages, serious students (and may we suppose that there are few) are not prepared to tolerate the activities that occur at the DT management and their own night. It is not enough that we are assaulted with the raucous noise the goings-on below, but we are even permitted to use the pool facilities along with the party-goers.

The weekend might be more appropriate for such activities. Monday night is not. The management seems to forget, despite complaints, that some one hundred + twenty people in the north side of the building are affected.

I now quote from the BYU Housing Guidelines which are presented to every student who enters the dorms:

"You have the right under the law to peaceful enjoyment of the life area, including freedom from excessive noise... If you persist in disturbing the peace, you will be referred to University Standards for disciplinary action."

Although this is a rather liberal view of the guideline, I think it applicable. May we, therefore, request, quote out of context, or had my meaning distorted.

If newspapers or reporters are concerned at all for accurate representation of persons' viewpoints,

Local stations don't compete

Over the Pioneer Day weekend gas jumped suddenly from anywhere between 60 to 28 cents per gallon. The problem is finding who and who is to blame.

When I drove to my local service station, I found gas was $1.09 per gallon one day and $1.19 the next. I was shocked to see such a significant increase. Especially when I noticed all of the stations I visited showed the same price per gallon.

Curious over the sudden upsurge in gas prices, I decided to investigate. My local service station is called Walker Oil, who in turn told me to call H. Oil, either distributors in Salt Lake City. H. Oil told me gas prices were determined locally.

One of the distributors in Salt Lake City, Central Distributing in Spanish Fork was possibly in control of many stations' prices in the County.

Boyd Cobbley, president of Central Distributing, said this statement was false. He said that station makes up its own mind on individual prices. He said he could claim Walker Oil made up prices also.

Cobbley said any gas station owner can look his window and see what the competition is asking and copy their price to make more of a profit. Cobbley claimed profits are on a low margin in Utah County, and that gas stations could make more of an investment by putting their money in bank.

I said, "Gas stations don't get a reason to return on their investment and I personally understand why people keep building them in the area."

Cobbley said it was reasonable that stations would raise their prices in the Summer and on holidays. It goes back to the old supply and demand ethic, he said. When more people need gas, prices go up.

It seems if more people bought gas, it would enable the suppliers to sell at a lower price. If more people are buying gas, it seems the prices would make more of a profit and inspire people to buy gas.

Everywhere I called for information, I got runaround. No one seems to be responsible, everyone's prices seem to go up the same day. If one station kept its prices lower than the others, it would get more business and make more money. Instead of all stations having equal prices, it should be healthy competition. The government outlawed monopolies, but if you compare prices, it seems more like service stations in the area are selling at the same price.

It makes one wonder why gas prices are always the same. The holiday is over and prices are back down to $1.10. Is this another example of a "circular" price? Or is it just a coincidence like Cobbley's? Does one station raise or lower its price and the rest just follow in suit. Whatever reason for the sudden increases and decrease in Utah Valley, it almost seems that most stations are members of an informal gas fixing ring.

If so, I think it's time the consumer rebels, who is in control here, the consumer or the suppliers?
